Educating for human rights and global citizenship

Authors: Ali A Abdi 1955-, Lynette Shultz

Print Book ©2008
Albany : State University of New York Press, ©2008.

Summary: "Nearly sixty years after the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in spite of progress on some fronts, we are in many cases as far away as ever from achieving an inclusive citizenship and human rights for all. While human rights violations continue to affect millions across the world, there are also ongoing contestations regarding citizenship. In response to these and

Ice and the Climate of Philosophy in Canada.

Authors: Wesselius, Janet Catherina[1] (AUTHOR) jcw3@ualberta.ca

Abstract: In 2015, Sheila Watt-Cloutier published The Right to Be Cold, in which she set out her Inuit and climate-change activism. She says that "ice is the life force" of the Inuit. In this article, I use Lorraine Code's method of "ecological thinking" to understand how Watt-Cloutier's thought grows out of her Inuit habitus and, more broadly, out of her habitus as a Canadian. I first argue, using Rupert Lodge, that Watt-Cloutier's thought constitutes an "applied philosophy." I further argue that Watt-Cloutier's view of the environment is part of one kind of Canadian habitus, using the view of nature in George Blewett's philosophy. Finally, I analyze Watt-Cloutier's use of the concept of human rights to advocate for the Inuit "right to be cold" to show that her thought can be fruitfully understood as an interplay between her Inuit habitus and her Canadian habitus. # The Forgotten Fundamental: Freedom of Conscience in Canada

Bird, Brian Darrell Noel. 2019.

Abstract

Freedom of conscience is, relative to other human rights, unknown. This thesis breathes life into this human right, using Canada as a point of entry. What is the substance of freedom of conscience? Why protect that substance in bills of rights? When can states limit this freedom?This thesis proposes that freedom of conscience protects the freedom to live in alignment with moral commitments, whether they stem from religious or nonreligious sources. Integrity and identity are the primary reasons why freedom of conscience makes the cut for bills of rights. A person compromises these values when she betrays her moral commitments. This betrayal can be harmful and may injure her dignity. Given the significance of the interests standing behind freedom of conscience, this thesis proposes that this human right deserves robust protection.Even so, freedom of conscience is not absolute. At times, states may limit freedom of conscience--for example, where exercises of this freedom negate the essence of a profession, harm others, or injure dignity. A limit on freedom of conscience occurs only where states require a person, on pain of legal sanction, to materially cooperate with what she believes is immoral.After building a theory of this human right, this thesis applies that theory to invocations of freedom of conscience in two contexts: health care and marriage. On health care, this thesis proposes, as a way to reconcile the competing rights and
